Bengaluru—Indian high-tech capital

Bengaluru in the heart of South India is known as the silicon valley of the East. A large number of EMS companies involved in electronics production are located in and around Bengaluru. Furthermore, many Research and Educational Institutes are situated in and around Bengaluru. Bengaluru is well connected by road, rail and air to all cities and the New International Airport has been opened in 2008.

Exhibition area

Bangalore International Exhibition Centre (BIEC) offers about 60,000 square meters of covered space in 4 aesthetically and functionally designed exhibition halls. The Conference Centre, the Food Court and other support services for exhibitor and visitor comfort, all within the same complex, make BIEC a unique and most sought after exhibition Centre in India.
